From the Executive Director

As I complete my first year at SIECUS, I am grateful for the opportunity to build on SIECUS' remarkable 62-year legacy, proud of what we have accomplished together, and excited about the future we are building together.

At its core, our work is about making sure every young person has the information and skills they need to lead healthy, fulfilling lives. Comprehensive sex education helps young people understand their bodies, build respectful relationships, navigate consent, make informed decisions about their future, and feel affirmed in who they are. It equips them not just to protect their own well-being, but also to treat others with dignity and respect.

Over the past year, we've seen coordinated efforts to replace evidence-based sex education with ideology, restrict access to information, and roll back decades of progress. Fortunately, SIECUS was built for this moment.

Together with our partners across the country, we helped stop harmful legislation, expanded public education efforts to change the conversation around sex education, and continued leading the sex education policy tracking and analysis that no other organization provides. We also took our fight to the courts by joining a federal lawsuit to defend the Teen Pregnancy Prevention Program, securing a preliminary injunction that stopped millions of federal dollars from being redirected to harmful, ideologically driven disinformation. And while policy wins matter, what motivates me every day are the young people who finally feel seen in the classroom, the parents who stand up for young people's rights, the educators who decide to speak out, and the advocates responding rapidly to new policy threats.

These are the people at the heart of our work and the reason our new strategic plan focuses on building a stronger sex education advocacy ecosystem, growing public support for sex education, and providing the policy analysis and evidence needed to drive lasting change.

To all of you who made this year possible, thank you. The challenges ahead are real, but so is the strength of this community. Together, we will continue defending the right of every young person to inclusive, medically accurate, and affirming sex education.

With deep gratitude,

Callie Simon (she/her)
Executive Director, SIECUS

IMPACT AT A GLANCE

Meeting the moment: How we turned a wave of attacks into wins

THE CHALLENGE

Increasing attacks threatened young people's access to the sex education they need to understand their bodies, build healthy relationships, and make informed decisions about their futures.

97
harmful sex ed bills introduced by lawmakers nationwide

+7%
bills targeting sex ed than the year before

OUR STRATEGY Three pillars, working together to meet rapid threats with coordinated action

01

Strengthen the sex ed advocacy ecosystem

41
advocacy and policy support requests answered, strengthening the fight for sex ed across 23 states

20+
convenings where we shared SIECUS expertise and built partnerships across allied movements

02

Shape narratives and drive action

3M+
impressions through Sex Ed Now, our first multimedia campaign, bringing new audiences into the sex ed movement

565
media and academic articles featuring SIECUS, reaching an estimated 3.5 billion people with accurate information about sex ed

03

Translate policy and evidence into tools

665+
bills tracked and analyzed to identify threats and opportunities nationwide

20+
policy tools and explainers equipping advocates and policymakers to take action for sex ed

Together, SIECUS and our partners protected and expanded access to sex education

3 supportive sex ed policies passed

34 harmful sex ed bills defeated

By defeating harmful bills and passing supportive policies, SIECUS and our partners are protecting and expanding comprehensive sex education for millions of young people, building toward an equitable nation where all people are affirmed in who they are and empowered to shape their own health and lives.

Impact in Detail

Meeting the Moment

FY26 was a defining year for SIECUS. As attacks on comprehensive sex education accelerated across the country, we met the moment by strengthening advocacy networks, equipping partners with timely policy expertise, and making the case for comprehensive sex education to new audiences.

The challenges we faced were significant. Across the country, lawmakers introduced 97 bills attacking sex education, part of an increasingly coordinated effort to restrict access to honest information about relationships, gender, and reproductive autonomy. But these bills were only the most visible signs of a larger threat. SIECUS identified and exposed the broader ideological campaign driving them.

In response, SIECUS mobilized on all fronts. We strengthened the sex education advocacy ecosystem by supporting partners in 23 states, providing technical assistance, policy analysis, small grants, and strategic guidance to help defeat harmful legislation and advance positive change. We translated complex policy developments into actionable tools that empowered advocates, policymakers, journalists, and supporters to respond effectively to emerging threats. We sued the Trump Administration to stop the hijacking of the Teen Pregnancy Prevention Program. And we shaped public narratives through new research, media engagement, and the launch of Sex Ed Now, our first-ever multimedia public education campaign.

This report tells the story of how SIECUS met the moment this year by leading the policy fight at the federal level, strengthening the state sex ed advocacy ecosystem, creating the public support necessary to defend sex education, and equipping advocates with the analysis and tools they need to win.

ATTACKS ON SEX ED
What We Saw in 2026

Erasing abortion from sex ed

Increasing efforts to eradicate abortion from sex education through abstinence-only instruction, mandates to teach students inaccurate information about fetal development with “Baby Olivia” videos, and the mandatory addition of adoption-promotion in sex ed curricula.

“Success sequencing” laws

Abstinence-only “success sequencing” laws that require students to learn that the only path to economic prosperity is to finish school, get a job, marry, then have sex and children. These bills repackage abstinence-only messaging while ignoring the diversity of families and the systemic barriers that shape young people’s opportunities and outcomes.

Limits on inclusive sex ed

Escalating attacks on access to inclusive sex education, including parental “opt in” requirements, laws restricting inclusion of sexual orientation and gender identity in sex ed, and book bans that limit access to accurate information.

At the Federal Level

Protecting Progress and Building Momentum

At the federal level, SIECUS protected hard-won progress while pressing for lasting change. When the Trump-Vance Administration terminated Teen Pregnancy Prevention grants this summer, we mounted a rapid response. At the same time, we built new congressional support for our flagship progressive sex ed legislation, the Real Education and Access for Healthy Youth Act (REAHYA).

Advocacy in Action: Defending the Teen Pregnancy Prevention Program

When the Trump Administration terminated 53 of 67 Teen Pregnancy Prevention grants in June 2026, we knew we had to act. The entire SIECUS team moved immediately to create and deploy a rapid response strategy that included action alerts to allied organizations, meetings with members of Congress, and a social media campaign. To fight back, SIECUS joined a coalition lawsuit, alongside Planned Parenthood of the Heartland; Hennepin County, Minnesota; and King County, Washington, to challenge these actions in federal court. Democracy Forward, Public Citizen, and Dunn Isaacson Rhee LLP represent SIECUS, Hennepin County, and King County. Planned Parenthood Federation of America represents Planned Parenthood of the Heartland.

We launched a strategic response to protect our movement and, by joining the lawsuit, we're taking a stand for inclusive, evidence-based sex education.

The language of our complaint is, itself, a robust defense of evidence-based public health initiatives, one that relies heavily on SIECUS' own research and analysis. In addition to coordinating action among our partners, we also reached out to our supporters with a call to action that resulted in 635 people contacting their representatives about cuts to Teen Pregnancy Prevention. As of September 2026, 92 lawmakers have signed a bicameral letter to Robert F. Kennedy, Jr., demanding that the Department of Health and Human Services allocate these grants as Congress intended.

Coverage of this lawsuit has been widespread. Publications like The New York Times and The Washington Post have offered national perspectives, while regional outlets are exploring the impact of the Trump Administration's actions on sex education at the local level. These stories provide a platform for SIECUS to inform the public about comprehensive sex education while pushing back against ideologically driven misinformation coming from the federal government.

On August 19, 2026, a federal judge granted a preliminary injunction blocking the Trump Administration's attempt to reallocate Teen Pregnancy Prevention grants already approved by Congress. This stopped nearly $100M from being spent on extremely harmful programs for America's young people. But the fight isn't over. While the ruling halted implementation of the new policy, previously terminated Teen Pregnancy Prevention grants have not yet been restored and the funding appears to have been allocated through a covert contract to a company allied with the Administration. SIECUS will keep up the pressure as the case moves forward and keep fighting for young people's access to the evidence-based sex education they deserve.

Legislative Progress: Real Education and Access for Healthy Youth Act

In 2025, we supported Rep. Alma Adams (NC-12), Rep. Pramila Jayapal (WA-07), Sen. Cory Booker (NJ), and Sen. Mazie Hirono (HI) as they reintroduced the Real Education and Access for Healthy Youth Act (REAHYA) in both chambers of Congress. This bill aims to create the first-ever federal 5-year grant initiative dedicated to comprehensive sex education programming and health services that are evidence-based, medically accurate, age-appropriate, and culturally responsive. Since then, support for the bill has grown. During Sex Ed for All Month 2026, SIECUS mobilized advocates and worked directly with congressional offices to secure three new cosponsors. REAHYA now has 30 co-sponsors, 24 in the House and 6 in the Senate, reflecting growing momentum for equitable, comprehensive sex education and access for young people nationwide!

"Every young person deserves honest, accurate information about their bodies, their relationships, and their health. Comprehensive sex education gives students the knowledge they need to protect themselves and make well-informed decisions. Investing in this education means investing in one of our most effective tools for addressing health disparities in underserved communities, where young people often face barriers to accurate information and quality care. It has been my pleasure to work alongside SIECUS in introducing the Real Education and Access for Healthy Youth Act in the 119th Congress and I look forward to future work together."

At the State Level

Growing the Movement from the Ground Up

In 2026, SIECUS and our partners helped pass three supportive sex education policies and defeat 34 harmful sex education bills.

As attacks on sex education intensified in 2026, SIECUS met the moment by investing in the people and organizations at the heart of the movement for sex education at the state and local level. Through the Sex Education Policy Action Council (SEPAC), SIECUS convenes 60 state and national partners working across 30 states for strategy sessions, policy briefings, training opportunities, and peer learning. SEPAC serves as a home for advocates on the front lines, helping organizations coordinate efforts, share lessons learned, and respond quickly to emerging threats and opportunities.

Throughout the year, SIECUS translated policy expertise into practical advocacy support, responding to 41 requests for technical assistance from partners across 23 states. From testimony support and advocacy messaging to strategy calls, action alerts, fact sheets, and toolkits, we helped partners challenge harmful legislation and advance policies that support young people's health and rights.

This investment delivered results. Behind every victory are months, and often years, of work that rarely makes headlines: tracking legislation, developing strategy, building relationships, and supporting advocates as they navigate rapidly changing political environments. This work lays the groundwork for future wins and helps stop policies that would limit access to inclusive, evidence-based sex education for millions of young people.

One example of SEPAC's impact in action was Sex Ed Week of Action, SIECUS' largest annual advocacy event. In 2026, we awarded $10,000 in microgrants to 13 partners across 11 states, supporting youth-led trainings, state capitol advocacy days, storytelling campaigns, teach-ins, and community education events. Together, these advocates demonstrated that support for comprehensive sex education remains strong, visible, and growing.

SEPAC In Action: Dreaming Justice Project in Georgia

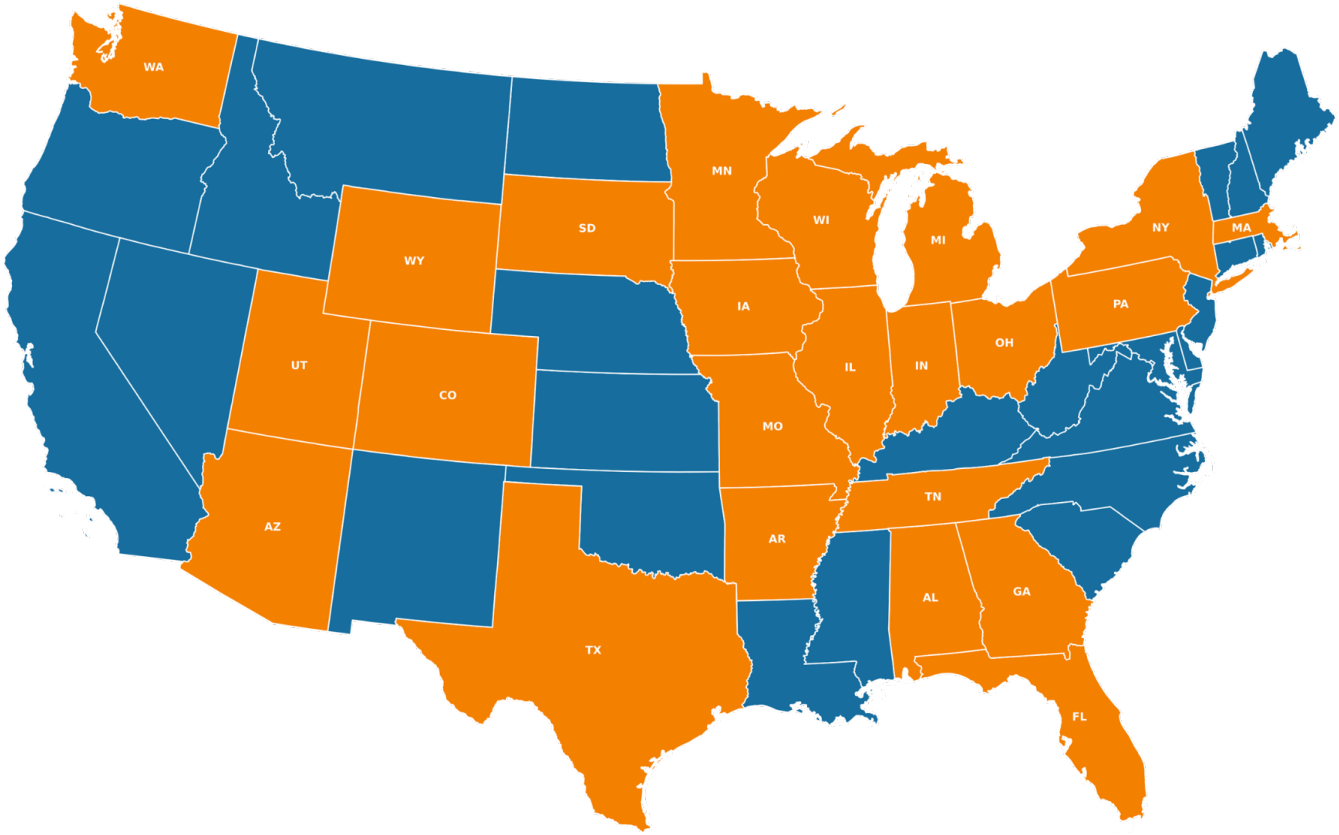
"Being at the Dreaming Up Community Health and Sexual Wellness Fair felt like stepping into a space where I didn't have to explain myself to be cared for. I was able to access resources, ask real questions without judgment, and leave with information I actually trust. Events like this are rare, and they matter more than people realize."

– Anise

"What stood out to me about this activation was how intentional everything felt, from the vendors to the conversations happening on the ground. It wasn't just about handing out information, it was about building trust and meeting people where they are. The Dreaming Justice Project created a space that felt both empowering and necessary."

– Michael

In FY26, SIECUS provided technical assistance to partners in 23 states.



In February, Senior State Policy Manager, Miranda Estes, and Federal Policy Manager, Sarah Wing, spoke to National Sex Ed Conference attendees about advancing inclusive sex education in their communities.

Spotlight on State Wins

Investing in state advocates delivers results. Across the country, our partners used SIECUS' policy analysis, advocacy tools, and strategic guidance to advance inclusive sex education and stop harmful legislation. These victories demonstrate what's possible when local leaders have the support they need to succeed.

Michigan

In November 2025, the Michigan State Board of Education advanced inclusive, medically accurate, and trauma-informed instruction by updating health education guidelines for the first time since 2007. When the guidelines came under attack, SIECUS joined the Michigan Organization on Adolescent Sexual Health (MOASH), Red Wine and Blue, Advocates for Youth, and other partners to mobilize supporters through testimony, emails, and public comments.

Wyoming

When a "Baby Olivia" bill was introduced, SIECUS provided rapid-response technical assistance and advocacy messaging to Wyoming Right to Choose. The bill was ultimately stopped in committee, preventing it from advancing during the 2026 legislative session.

"The vote was close, and House leadership made this bill a priority over many other bills as the deadline for bill introductions approached–but the end result was gratifying. We couldn't have done this without your help" –SIECUS partner in Wyoming

Minnesota

In September 2026, Minnesota approved its first statewide K–12 health standards. For years, SIECUS has been working with Honest Sex Ed Minnesota and Minnesota Coalition Against Sexual Assault to modernize the state's sex education laws. SIECUS also supported legislation directing the Minnesota Department of Education to create the standards and submitted public comments urging inclusive, evidence-based instruction. Students statewide could have consistent, high-quality health education as early as 2028–29.

"The approval of Minnesota's first ever statewide health standards is a huge step towards more equal and consistent sex ed for students across the state. This win is also just the start, it's going to take real work and community collaboration which we're eager to lead! We're advocating for professional development funds for health educators, training teachers, and building a movement of sex education champions in Minnesota to make sure students get the education they deserve."

– Dr. Meg Bartlett-Chase,
Founder and Executive Director of Honest Sex Ed Minnesota

Leading a National Movement

Shaping the Conversation, Expanding Our Reach

This year, SIECUS took a major step forward in shaping public understanding of sex education with the launch of Sex Ed Now, our first-ever multimedia public education campaign.

At a time when attacks on sex education are accelerating, Sex Ed Now helps people understand what sex education really is and why it is increasingly under attack while inviting them to take action alongside SIECUS. As of the end of September 2026, the campaign, which we developed with Vision First, has generated over 3 million impressions! In addition, SIECUS hit the podcast and webinar circuit to spread the word about the attacks on sex education, and what folks can do about it.

In March 2026, Executive Director Callie Simon was a guest on rePROs Fight Back, a production of the Population Institute. That same month, Senior Policy Manager Nawal Umar joined historian Margaret Myers on an episode of Have You Heard? devoted to the history of sex education in the United States. Callie also joined Jessica Valenti of Abortion, Every Day for a webinar hosted by our partners at EducateUs. They talked about how sex ed is a battleground for gender equality and abortion, how we challenge the tradwives trend, and so much more. SIECUS staff joined Red, Wine, and Blue for a webinar, bringing the fight for sex ed to a whole new audience, and, in late September, Callie took part in an Instagram Live hosted by the Woodhull Freedom Foundation.

This digital outreach is part of a coordinated campaign to meet people where they are: on streaming TV, social media, and YouTube. These efforts honor SIECUS' roots as a resource for parents and educators seeking honest, health-centered information about sexuality. While our work has expanded over the decades to include policy advocacy and movement building, one lesson remains unchanged: Lasting change requires public understanding and public engagement.

Building Cross-Movement Partnerships

Throughout the year, SIECUS worked to strengthen the movement for sex education in two important ways: by building connections across allied movements and by investing in the future of sex education.

Through participation in more than 10 national and state coalitions and more than 20 virtual and in-person convenings, SIECUS helped bridge sex education advocacy with broader efforts focused on reproductive justice, LGBTQIA+ equality, stopping censorship, and youth development. By joining advocates across issues and sectors, we strengthened partnerships, expanded collective advocacy power, and advanced a shared vision of sex education as central to health, equity, and justice.

Through the Future of Sex Education (FoSE) initiative with Advocates for Youth, Answer, and Planned Parenthood Federation of America, SIECUS developed and shared evidence-based resources that help lawmakers, educators, and advocates make informed decisions. This year, FoSE reviewed 14 widely used abstinence-only curricula against the National Sex Education Standards, reaffirming that these programs fail to provide young people with the knowledge and skills they need to protect their health. SIECUS also helped cultivate the next generation of advocates by partnering with state and national partners to lead youth teach-ins and train adults and young people to advocate for sex ed at the local level in states like Florida.

Whether connecting movements, equipping advocates with trusted research, or preparing future leaders, SIECUS is helping build a stronger, more united movement for comprehensive sex education.

Senior State Policy Manager, Miranda Estes, joined SIECUS state partners at the Georgia State Capitol in March.

SIECUS in the Media

One lesson we learned this year is that suing the federal government of the United States gets the media's attention. SIECUS Executive Director Callie Simon and Director of Public Affairs Alison Macklin were both quoted in national and international publications covering the Teen Pregnancy Prevention lawsuit.

One thing that didn't change this year: Journalists relied on SIECUS' publications and experts to understand the sex education landscape and make it legible to readers. In February 2026, The Washington Post turned to Senior Policy Manager Nawal Umar for an article on the "success sequencing." Senior State Policy Manager Miranda Estes is quoted in a March 2026 Guardian piece on community-led sex ed. And, as usual, our State Profiles served as the basis for dozens of articles and social media posts. In 2026, SIECUS was featured in 565 media and academic articles reaching an estimated 3.49 billion people.

Here's a small sample of SIECUS' media mentions from the past year...

Repro Rights NOW, September 2026

The Anti-Abortion Fight Is Moving Into the Sex-Ed Classroom

Abortion-related restrictions in sex education predate the Supreme Court's 2022 decision in Dobbs v. Jackson Women's Health Organization. But Umar said newer strategies have become particularly visible during the past several years.
"After that, the anti-abortion movement's new focus, I think, has been sex education as the front line for the fight for reproductive freedom," Umar said.

Bloomberg Law, August 2026

Trump's Teen Pregnancy Grant Funding Limits Paused by Judge

"While we are encouraged that the court has halted implementation of the new harmful policy, the impacts of terminating existing grants remain. Communities across the country are still without the evidence-based programs they relied on, and we will continue fighting to ensure young people have access to the sex education they deserve," said Callie Simon, Executive Director of SIECUS.

Stateline, July 2026

Feds have a new teen pregnancy prevention plan: Fertility and 're-productive goals'

Alison Macklin, Director of Public Affairs at sex ed advocacy group SIECUS, said based on what she has seen at the local level, the new funding opportunity is paving the way for crisis pregnancy centers to apply for and receive federal dollars

From Analysis to Action

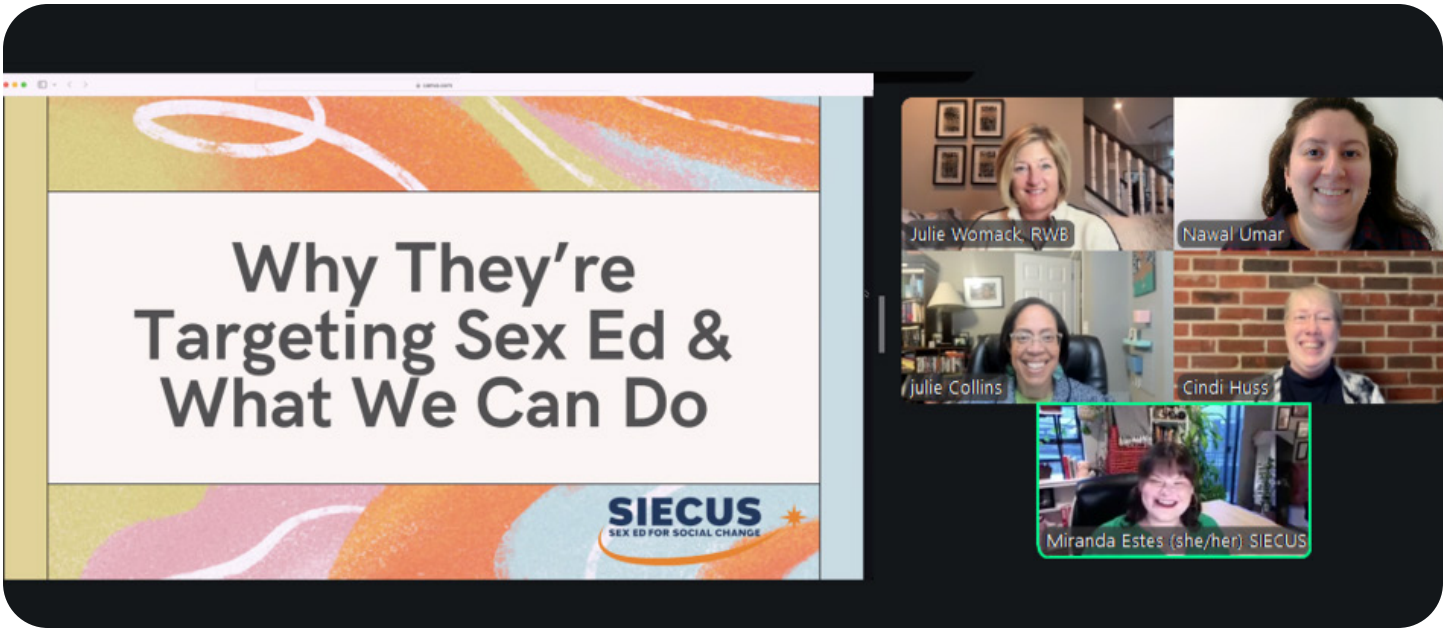
Creating a Roadmap for Resistance

As the only national organization that tracks sex ed bills across all 50 states, SIECUS plays a unique role in our ecosystem.

We translate accurate, up-to-date data into reports, policy briefs, and action alerts and, in a year marked by escalating attacks on sex education, we continued to provide the analysis, legislative tracking, and policy expertise that advocates, journalists, and policymakers rely on to understand an increasingly complex landscape.

No publication better illustrates this role than Backward to the Future: The Heritage Foundation's Radical Vision for America's Next 250 Years. Published in April 2026, the report identified a coordinated effort to transform sex education into a vehicle for advancing pronatalist policies, "traditional" gender roles, and reduced reproductive autonomy. As the year unfolded, many of the trends we documented appeared in state legislatures and federal policymaking, culminating in the Trump Administration's effort to dismantle the Teen Pregnancy Prevention program and replace it with abstinence-only, anti-gender equality, pronatalist programming. SIECUS predicted the fight that would ultimately lead to Hennepin County, Minnesota et al. v. U.S. Department of Health and Human Services et al., a coalition lawsuit in which SIECUS is a plaintiff.

Throughout the year, SIECUS translated research into action through a suite of trusted publications and tools. Our flagship resources–the State Profiles, the 2026 Mid-Year Legislative Analysis, and the 2026 Legislative Look-Ahead–provided essential data and analysis on legislative trends nationwide. We complemented these cornerstone publications with real-time legislative trackers, policy briefs on emerging threats, and narrative-changing media like our Persistent Lies video series. Together, these resources provide the evidence, analysis, and strategic insights that inform public debate, strengthen advocacy efforts, and help the movement anticipate and respond to emerging threats.



SIECUS staff Nawal Umar and Miranda Estes, joined Red, Wine, and Blue for a webinar about the attacks on sex ed and what we can do about it.

Donor Spotlight: Dr. Myeshia Price

"Comprehensive sexuality education is about so much more than preventing disease or unintended pregnancy. As a developmental psychologist, I see sexuality as part of human development and well-being across the lifespan. Young people deserve the knowledge and resources they need not simply to avoid negative outcomes, but to develop healthy understandings of themselves, their bodies, their relationships, and their sexuality. SIECUS is fighting to ensure that all young people have access to that education, which is why I choose to support their work every month."

Dr. Myeshia Price first learned about SIECUS 15 years ago while working as a sexual health scholar at Morehouse School of Medicine. Since then, their career has focused on understanding the development, health, and well-being of young people, including LGBTQIA+ youth.

That developmental perspective has reinforced their belief that comprehensive sexuality education is an essential part of supporting young people as they grow—not simply a tool for preventing negative health outcomes. Today, Dr. Price serves on SIECUS' Board of Directors and supports SIECUS through a recurring monthly gift, helping sustain our work to advance policies that ensure young people have access to comprehensive, inclusive sexuality education.

For Dr. Price, supporting SIECUS is an investment in young people's well-being today and throughout their lives.

Donor Spotlight: Stephanie Morgan

"There has been a persistent and pervasive movement within our society to prevent people from understanding their own reproductive systems and, when it comes to sex ed, I don't trust anyone in the current Administration. I'm very happy to support SIECUS as they fight for accurate, thorough sex education, and I'm thrilled that my gift to SIECUS went twice as far because the company I work for has a generous gift-matching program."

For Stephanie Morgan, the decision to support SIECUS comes down to a simple conviction: Knowledge is power. Stephanie believes that when young people are denied accurate, complete sexuality education, misinformation fills the gap. Too often, conversations about reproductive health are treated as embarrassing, controversial, or inappropriate, leaving young people without the knowledge they need to make informed decisions about their bodies, relationships, and futures.

That concern has strengthened her commitment to SIECUS. Stephanie understands that misinformation can have real consequences, particularly for people capable of childbearing, who may face significant emotional and financial challenges when denied access to reliable information about their reproductive health and options.

For Stephanie, supporting SIECUS is an investment in a future where everyone has the knowledge they need to make informed choices and lead healthy lives.
